

THE FUTURE OF FILM CASE FOR SUPPORT

CREATING THE FUTURE OF FILM

Film is one of the most expensive crafts to learn and without appropriate support, even the best emerging talent can face overwhelming barriers to success.

From accessing hands -on experience and appropriate early career placement and development opportunities, to the financial support for education and training, through to peer learning and career development support - emerging talent needs comprehensive backing which is not currently coherently available and is particularly challenging for those from diverse backgrounds and outside of London to access. These barriers in turn limit the industry's creative potential and cultural relevance.

London Film School will meet these challenges and secure a fit-for-purpose home for the future and evolve into a talent development hub, addressing skills gaps in the burgeoning film sector while supporting local people.

Our vision is to create a lifetime pathway for engagement with the film industry, from community programmes, to training, higher education, employment, job creation and company development – via internships, placements and support, alongside supporting community integration through our public programme. Each year, more than 8,000 young people will participate in and benefit from the LFS ACCESS programme, which creates coherent patways into film for young people from all backgrounds, including:

- 320 students under 18 participating in free film industry training programmes
- 20 NEETS learning new skills via film by attending a Summer Academy
 300 students aged 16-18 securing an LFS Arts Award through a schools-based programme
- 20 young long-term unemployed people participating in a Summer Academy leaning new skills through film
 150 FE students learning about access routes
- Into creative departments
 150 FE students learning about access routes into production departments
 - 150 FE students learning about routes into departments including construction, electrical and art
- 200 young people benefiting from travel and other bursaries via GET HERE to addressing other barriers to participating in the free LFS programme
- 4,500 young people nationwide participating in an online community where they access training tools and materials

This commitment will be underpinned by a significantly enhanced bursary and financial support programme to ensure the best emerging talent from all backgrounds can access these opportunities.

Emerging talent needs comprehensive backing. LFS will meet these challenges and secure a fit-for-purpose home for the future
